For Koch, creating value goes far beyond economic performance. That’s why we work every day to create better products, using fewer resources than the day before.

Koch has been the EPA’s first or second ranked company for pollution prevention initiatives since 2012.

The Wildlife Habitat Council (WHC) has certified conservation and education programs at 13 Koch company sites for our commitment to habitat conservation and environmental education. In 2015, WHC recognized the achievements of these programs by awarding Koch the Conservation Education Award.

A Shared Commitment

With more than 300 sites across the United States, we’re one of America’s largest manufacturers. To stay in business for the long term, we must continuously improve – finding ways to use fewer resources, operate safely and protect the environment.

93% PRODUCTION RELATED WASTE

Based on an EPA report, 93% of the production related waste (PRW) our 125 reporting facilities produced in 2017 was recycled, recovered for energy or treated - a total of 556 million pounds.*

ENOUGH TO POWER 360,000 HOUSEHOLDS

We’ve invested more than $600 million, and years of hard work, into energy saving initiatives. In fact, over the last five years we’ve saved enough energy to power 360,000 households for an entire year.

$2.5 MILLION TONS OF RECOVERED PAPER

Each of our companies promotes effective resource management and recycling throughout their operations. In 2017, Georgia-Pacific used approximately 2.5 million tons of recovered paper and paperboard to make everyday products.
